Form S-4 File No.: 333-257997

This filing relates to the proposed business combination (the “Business Combination”) between Leo Holdings III Corp, a Cayman Islands exempted company (“Leo”), and Local Bounti Corporation, a Delaware corporation (“Local Bounti”), pursuant to the terms of an Agreement and Plan of Merger, dated as of June 17, 2021 (as it may be amended, supplemented or otherwise modified from time to time, the “Merger Agreement”), by and among Leo, Longleaf Merger Sub, Inc., a Delaware corporation, Longleaf Merger Sub II, LLC, a Delaware limited liability company, and Local Bounti.

The following is a transcript of an interview first made available on October 25, 2021.

Maya Rodriguez: Windswept mountain ranges and morning temperatures hovering in the 30s. It’s fall in Montana, not the ideal growing season unless you’re in here.

Meaghan McGrath: This new type of growing is really exciting.

Maya: This is Local Bounti, a company specializing in growing facilities like these and focusing on a new way of farming. Meaghan McGrath is director of product development.

Meaghan: This is our butter lettuce pond. We sell these as a living head as well as a cut product so you can make a salad directly.

Maya: It’s a year-round growing operation with an output that the company says uses no pesticides and 90% less water and land than traditional farming.

Gary Hilberg: This facility is a couple of acres. This would be equivalent to 20 or more acres of traditional farmland.

Maya: It’s a critical savings in land and water that could make a difference in the coming years, not just in the drought-ravaged West, but around the world. By 2050, the United Nations estimates the global population will be more than 9 billion people. The planet will need to produce 70% more food just to meet that demand. Local Bounti says there are other environmental impacts that can also be avoided, including how most produce gets to people in the first place, often by traveling thousands of miles.

Gary: By the time you get it, it’s been days or weeks since it’s been harvested and you lose quality, you’ve got a lot of loss, tremendous amount of waste, and a tremendous amount of emissions driving that produce all around the country.

Maya: To mitigate that, the company says it’s staying local, selling as close to where it’s grown as possible. Right now, their products are in 500 stores around Montana, Idaho, Colorado, Utah, and Nevada, and other Western states. They say that can help consumers save money by providing fresher produce that reduces food waste.

Meaghan: Many of us have that moment where we go to make a salad at home. We pull out that clamshell and it's slimy because it's traveled many miles, it's taken many days to get to you, and both because we're growing locally and the way that we grow is bringing that really fresh product to you that lasts longer.

Maya: It's a growing industry with a $30 billion potential in the Western US alone!

Gary: This technology can apply to all different types of plants. Agriculture business is growing rapidly for exactly those reasons. There's lots and we will not be the only player in this area. We expect to be one of many.

Maya: One of many tapping into our growing foods needs. In Hamilton, Montana, I'm Maya Rodriguez.
